Final Assembly and Checkout Alternatives for the Joint Strike Fighter ,2002 In October 2001, the Department of Defense (DoD) awarded a contract for System Development and Demonstration (SDD) of the Joint Strike Fighter (JSF) to the Lockheed Martin Aeronautics Company. The JSF program, which is expected to run for more than two decades and cost $300 billion, will deliver 3,002 fighter/attack aircraft to the U.S. Air Force, Navy, and Marine Corps, as well as to the UK Ministry of Defence. The JSF will replace U.S. Air Force F-16s and A-10s and complement the F-22; complement carrier-based U.S. Navy F/A-18E/Fs; replace U.S. Marine Corps AV-8Bs and F/A-18C/Ds; and replace UK Harrier aircraft. The primary reason for developing a single aircraft with three variants to fulfill the missions of the different services was to minimize cost. The result of having a single program will be considerable commonality among the three variants (conventional takeoff and landing CTOL, carrier variant CV, and short takeoff/vertical landing STOVL). This commonality will reduce both initial procurement and ongoing life-cycle costs, relative to having three unrelated aircraft. Many companies spread across the United States and the world will be building the various components and sub assemblies of the JSF. Lockheed Martin plans to assemble the major components of the JSF and test the aircraft at its Fort Worth, Texas, plant in a process called final assembly and checkout, or FACO.

Joint Strike Fighter Michael Sullivan,2011-08 The F-35 Lightning II, also known as the Joint Strike Fighter (JSF), is the Dept. of Defense's (DoD) most costly and ambitious aircraft acquisition, seeking to simultaneously develop and field three aircraft variants for the Air Force, Navy, Marine Corps, and eight international partners. The JSF is critical for recapitalizing tactical air forces and will require a long-term commitment to very large annual funding outlays. The current estimated investment is $382 billion to develop and procure 2,457 aircraft. This report discusses: (1) program cost and schedule changes and their implications on affordability; (2) progress made during 2010; (3) design and manufacturing maturity; and (4) test plans and progress. Charts and tables. This is a print on demand report.

F-35 Lightning II Joint Strike Fighter (JSF) Program Christopher C. Bolkcom,2009 The Defense Department's F-35 Lightning II Joint Strike Fighter (JSF) is one of three aircraft modernization programs in tactical aviation, the others being the Air Force F-22A fighter and the Navy F/A-18E/F fighter/attack plane. In November 1996, the Defense Department selected two major aerospace companies, Boeing and Lockheed Martin, to demonstrate competing designs for the JSF, a joint-service and multi-role fighter/attack plane. Lockheed Martin won this competition and was selected to develop and produce the JSF, a family of aircraft including conventional takeoff and landing (CTOL), carrier-capable (CV), and short take-off vertical landing (STOVL) versions for the U.S. Air Force, Navy, and Marine Corps, the United Kingdom, as well as other allied services. Originally designated the Joint Advanced Strike Technology (JAST) program, the JSF program has attracted considerable attention in Congress because of concerns about its cost, effects on the defense industrial base, and implications for U.S. national security in the 21st century.

F-35 Lightning II Joint Strike Fighter "JSF" Program: Background, Status, and Issues ,2007 The Defense Department's F-35 Lightning II Joint Strike Fighter (JSF) is one of three aircraft modernization programs in tactical aviation, the others being the Air Force F-22A fighter and the Navy F/A-18E/F fighter/attack plane. In November 1996, the Defense Department selected two major aerospace companies, Boeing and Lockheed Martin, to demonstrate competing designs for the JSF, a joint-service and multi-role fighter/attack plane. Lockheed Martin won this competition and was selected to develop and produce the JSF, a family of aircraft including conventional take-off and landing (CTOL), carrier-capable (CV), and short take-off vertical landing (STOVL) versions for the U.S. Air Force, Navy, and Marine Corps, the United Kingdom, as well as other allied services. Originally designated the Joint Advanced Strike Technology (JAST) program, the JSF program has attracted considerable attention in Congress because of concerns about its cost, effects on the defense industrial base, and implications for U.S. national security in the 21st century. The JAST/JSF program evolved in response to the high cost of tactical aviation, the need to deploy fewer types of aircraft to reduce acquisition and operating costs, and projections of future threat scenarios and enemy capabilities. The program's rationale and primary emphasis is joint-service development of a next-generation multi-role strike aircraft that can be produced in affordable variants to meet different operational requirements. Developing an affordable tri-service family of CTOL (Air Force and Navy variants) and STOVL aircraft with different (but similar) combat missions poses major technological challenges.

Birds of Fray Rajat Narang,2021-10-14 Fighter jets have remained the traditional backbone & core pivot of the fighting capabilities of Nations & Air Forces globally with their unmatched capabilities for conducting a broad range of critical missions ranging from aerial combat & interdiction, suppression of enemy air defenses (SEAD), ground attack and air dominance/superiority with the doctrine & tactical playbook of aerial warfare having shifted effectively from the erstwhile Dogfighting era to Beyond-Visual-Range engagements propelled by stand-off-range weapons. The surge in global defense spending over the recent years, driven by a rapid deterioration of traditional rule-based world, order has driven a rapid recapitalization of legacy fighter jet aircraft programs as a key priority. It has led to initiation of the development of a bevy of next generation aircraft programs & fast-tracked procurement of current generation jets across most parts of the globe for expansion of military capabilities & rapid build-up of capacity. In term of capabilities, the 5th generation aircraft programs are already proving to be clear favorites to replace the legacy platforms with Lockheed Martin's F-35 Lightning II stealth fighter jet program spearheading the charge & the generational shift towards stealth. A lot of action is already underway on the technological front with the 6th generation aircraft programs clearly on the anvil, geared towards the future, with their potential EIS' slated for late 2030s. Continental Europe is bracing for & committing itself to the development of two such 6th gen programs, namely, the Franco-German FCAS program and the Tempest program from the U.K.-Italy-Sweden triad. In the U.S., the NGAD program collectively represents the efforts being made towards the development of 6th generation combat aircraft to be powered by the upcoming Adaptive Cycle Engine (ACE) program featuring the third air stream. This work is intended to be a quick yet comprehensive resource on the World's Top Fighter Jet Aircraft Programs with focus on a blend of quantitative & qualitative analysis with a comparative, head-to-head comparison on technical specifications & capabilities, in almost virtual dogfights, for respective aircraft programs (based on classes) followed by comparative analysis based on technical & business perspective. For Military Aviation Buffs, it will be akin to a joyride at high supersonic speeds full of High-G aerobatics, while for the Pros, it will prove to be an unmatched & invaluable domain resource. So, put your gear on and simply Hop in! PS: Aircraft Programs covered: 1. Boeing F-15E Strike Eagle/F-15EX Eagle II 2. Boeing F/A-18E/F Super Hornet 3. Assessing Competitive Strategies for the Joint Strike Fighter: Opportunities and Options ,2001 The Department of Defense should stick with its winner-take-all strategy to develop and produce the Joint Strike Fighter (JSF). But as a hedge to ensure later versions of this next- generation aircraft-which is slated to become the workhorse fighter for the Air Force, Navy, and Marine Corps-have the most effective and innovative sensor, computer, and software technologies, the Pentagon should consider spending money to keep a second developer and producer of these vital electronics components in the market. Such an investment in a second producer of such missions systems, the electronics eyes and ears of the JSF, could be relatively modest. But it would provide future decision makers with the option to competitively develop a second mission system source when and if it were needed. So concludes this study of competitive strategies for the Joint Strike Fighter. Performed over the summer and early fall of 2000, we examined both near and long-term competition options, some in more detail and more quantitatively than others, constrained only by the available time (about four months). Throughout the study we obtained critical information from the competing program contractors and the Joint Strike Fighter Program Office. while much of that information was considered competition sensitive by the firms, in this report we present only our own analysis and conclusions, thus permitting unrestricted distribution.

Enabling Early Sustainment Decisions John G. Drew,Ronald G. McGarvey,Peter Buryk,2013 To inform Air Force sustainment sourcing decision-making, RAND researchers developed economic-based framework that guides sustainment decisions early in the acquisition cycle by comparing new programs with legacy Air Force systems.

F-35 Sustainment United States. Government Accountability Office,Cary Russell,2014 The F-35 Lightning II is intended to replace a variety of existing aircraft in the Air Force, Navy, and Marine Corps, while providing the most supportable, technologically advanced, lethal, and survivable aircraft to date. The F-35 is DOD's most expensive weapon system, with estimated sustainment costs of about $1 trillion. With the military services planning for the ability to deploy and maintain the F-35 within 4 years, DOD is working to develop a sustainment strategy that will be both affordable and executable for the program's life cycle. GAO was mandated to review DOD's F-35 sustainment planning efforts. This report addresses the extent to which DOD has (1) developed an F-35 sustainment strategy and addressed potential risks related to affordability and operational readiness and (2) developed a reliable O&S cost estimate for the program's life cycle. GAO analyzed documented plans and cost estimates and interviewed DOD and contractor officials. GAO recommends that DOD develop better informed affordability constraints; address three risks that could affect sustainment, affordability, and operational readiness; and take steps to improve the reliability of its cost estimates. DOD concurred with all but one recommendation and partially concurred with the recommendation to conduct uncertainty analysis on one of its cost estimates, stating it already conducts a form of uncertainty analysis. GAO continues to believe that the recommended analysis would provide a more comprehensive sense of the uncertainty in the estimates.
