Proactive Approaches for Controlling Recombinant Potato Virus Y Strains in Western Washington Debbie Inglis,Chris Benedict,Babette Gundersen,Abby Beissinger,Donald W. McMoran,2018 Recombinant strains of Potato virus Y (PVY) were detected in western Washington for the first time in 2012 and 2013. Recombinants can arise naturally when two or more different virus strains co-infect a plant cell. The presence of recombinant strains of PVY in the region is troubling because these strains are sometimes able to infect potato plants without causing obvious foliar symptoms, thus, making visual recognition of infected plants unreliable and thereby confounding seed potato certification efforts. This publication describes research investigations that were designed to answer frequent questions about three PVY strains: O, NTN, and N-Wi, and provides suggestions on proactive measures that can be taken to mitigate both seed tuber-borne and current season PVY infections.

Stronger Than This Abby McCarthy,2018-04-27 Marie: I married a monster -- a member of a motorcycle club. I was okay with him blurring the lines until the lines he crossed turned against me. He wasn't always a monster, or he hid it well. I wouldn't have married him if I'd known. By the time his true colors showed, I was pregnant with no way out. Until one day, years of planning paid off, and I was able to run away with my daughter. I found my footing in the foothills of Pennsylvania, thinking I would be far from any MC. I was wrong. Mickey: As a member of The Devil's Crusaders, not much escapes me in Wakeman. Especially not the tiny, fiery redhead who strolled into town, so obviously hiding from something. She made my blood boil in the best way possible. I'd avoided taking an old lady, instead, choosing to spend my years raising my daughter. Not anymore. Not since Marie. I was ready, and she was it for me. I just had to find out what she was hiding from before it finally catches up to her.
