Amtracs Steven J. Zaloga, 1999-09-01 The first prototype for the LVT (Landing Vehicle Tracked) was completed in July 1941, its design based on the Alligator, a tracked amphibious vehicle developed for rescue operations in the swamps of Florida. Though the early conception of amtrac operations envisioned using LVTs solely as supply vehicles, at Tarawa amtracs demonstrated their utility as assault vehicles to carry troops, leading to the development of new models. This book covers the evolution of amtracs, from the first LVT-1 to the LVT-7; their numerous variants; and their use throughout World War II and beyond.

A Case Study of the Advanced Amphibious Assault Vehicle (AAAV) Program from a Program Management Perspective Scott R. Adams, Naval Postgraduate School (U.S.), 1999-03-01 This research effort focused on the program management issues of the U.S. Marine Corps' Advanced Amphibious Assault Vehicle (AAAV) Program. The research answered the primary question of what were the critical program management decisions during the early phases of the program and how would an analysis of these decisions affect the future of the AAAV program. Interviews were conducted with key personnel from the AAAV office and General Dynamics Land Systems. Additionally, program documents and other relevant literature were reviewed. The key findings of the research effort concluded that reducing technical risk early in program is critical; Program Managers (PMs) must influence system design as early as possible; physical collocation of Government and contractor personnel facilitates the implementation of integrated Product and Process Development (IPPD) and Integrated Product Teams (IPTs); the use of IPPD and IPTs has helped the AAAV program but personnel need to be trained before implementation; adopting an evolutionary acquisition strategy will help prevent component obsolescence prior to fielding; and PMs should use special contracting provisions to incentivize contractors to reduce total ownership costs.

The Tech Behind Amphibious Vehicles Steve Goldsworthy, 2019-08 You're not imagining it! You just saw a vehicle go straight from land into the ocean. Amphibious vehicles have the unique ability to travel on both land and in water. As militaries look to jet-powered high-speed amphibious vehicles, consumers are taking recreational amphibious vehicles out for a spin. From lightweight streamlined hulls to retractable wheels, take young readers on a journey through the technology that makes these vehicles so amazing.

Analysis and Simulation of the Advanced Amphibious Assault Vehicle (AAAV) Electrical System Architecture Gabriel Beltran, 2000-06-01 The Advanced Amphibious Assault Vehicle (AAAV) is a high water speed amphibious armored personnel carrier that will replace the current family of Marine Corps amphibious assault vehicles. The AAAV is currently in Phase I of the DOD Acquisition Process. During this phase-extensive development, testing is being conducted and prototypes are being constructed. Ongoing tests of the current electrical system architecture are revealing problems and issues that need to be addressed. Present testing is also revealing the need for a troubleshooting tool that can be used to simulate and test proposed solutions. A distributive computing effort is being conducted with Purdue University in order to provide the Marine Corps a tool where by it can test and evaluate the entire AAAV electrical system architecture. This document provides a general system description of the AAAV, an electrical system architecture overview, and a candidate electrical system description. Testing, modeling, and computer simulation efforts applied to the NBC (Nuclear, Biological, and Chemical) fan/ filter motor drive and battery banks are described and the resulting data analyzed. Current research is investigating an issue regarding energy being forced back into the high power distribution bus due to regeneration from sudden impacts on the vehicle turret. An ultra capacitor bank may be incorporated in the AAV electrical system in an effort to mitigate the effect of this regenerative energy. Therefore, testing, modeling, and computer simulation of an ultra capacitor is also reported.

US World War II Amphibious Tactics Gordon L. Rottman, 2012-09-20 The US armed forces were responsible for many tactical innovations during the years 1941-45, but in no field was US mastery more complete than amphibious warfare. In the vast, almost empty battlefield of the Pacific the US Navy and Marine Corps were obliged to develop every aspect of the amphibious assault landing in painstaking detail, from the design of many new types of vessel, down to the tactics of the rifle platoon hitting the beach, and the logistic system without which they could not have fought their way inland. This fascinating study offers a clear, succinct explanation of every phase of these operations as they evolved during the war years, illustrated with detailed color plates and photographs.

Performance Analysis of the Advanced Amphibious Assault Vehicle Personnel Variant (AAAV-P) Vetronics Communications System High Speed Data Bus Deborah G. Peyton, Naval Postgraduate School (U.S.), 1999-06-01 The United States Marine Corps Advanced Amphibious Assault Vehicle Personnel Variant (AAAV-P) is a critical weapon system that supports the Naval Operational Maneuver from the Sea (OMFTS) concept. The AAAV-P will provide the Marine Corps with the ability to project naval power ashore in support of strategic objectives. The Marine Corps is relying on the AAAV-P to exploit the sea and land terrain in order to attain surprise and be able to rapidly take advantage of weak points in enemy littoral defenses. The first prototype of the AAAV-P will be completed in June 1999. Successful operation of the AAAV-P is heavily dependent upon the Vetronics System communications network residing within the vehicle. The Vetronics System supports three networks: a High Speed Data Bus, a Utility Bus, and a Powertrain Bus. This thesis develops a model of the High Speed Data Bus, which is considered the main data bus within the AAAV-P. The simulation results of the model are analyzed to determine if the High Speed Data Bus is properly designed to handle the anticipated communications traffic that will traverse the network. The network performance capability is evaluated under various scenarios.

A Case Study of the Advanced Amphibious Assault Vehicle (AAAV) Program from a Contracting Perspective Ronald R. Dalton, Naval Postgraduate School (U.S.), 1998-12-01 This research effort focused on the contracting history of the U.S. Marine Corps Advanced Amphibious Assault Vehicle (AAAV) Program. The research answered the primary question of what were the critical contracting decisions that have been made during the program and how would an analysis of these contracting decisions affect the future of the AAAV program. Interviews were conducted with personnel from the AAAV program office and other Government agencies as well as with contractor employees. Additionally, program documents and other relevant literature was reviewed. The key findings of the research effort conclude that the unique collocation arrangement of the AAAV program office and the contractor should be emulated by other Major Defense Acquisition Programs (MDAPs); Integrated Product Teams (IPTs) and the Integrated Product and Process Development (IPPD) concept is effective in improving communications between the Government and the contractor; and Unique contract clauses used in the Concept Demonstration and Validation contract were effective in incentivizing the contractor. The unique contract clauses examined were: mandatory geographic location of the contractor's facility, collocation of the AAAV program office with the contractor, a Special Design Decision Provision, and contractor cost sharing. The research effort presents recommendations on how these aspects of the AAAV program can be applied to other MDAPs.
