Boeing-Sikorsky RAH-66 "Comanche" Daniel Salvanes Lopez, 2011

The World's Fastest Helicopters Glen Bledsoe, Karen Bledsoe, Karen E. Bledsoe, 2002
Discusses the history and development of some of the world's fastest helicopters, describing the specific features and specifications of such aircraft as the SA 360 Dauphin, Boeing-Sikorsky RAH-66 Comanche, AH-64 Apache, and V-22 Osprey.

A Case History of the United States Army RAH-66 Comanche Helicopter Jason L. Galindo, 2000-03-01
The RAH-66 Comanche Helicopter was initiated as the Light Helicopter Family (LHX) in 1982 when an Army Aviation Mission Area Analysis (AAMAA) identified the need for an armed reconnaissance aircraft. Eighteen years later, the program has yet to reach a Defense Acquisition Board Milestone II review. This thesis described the history of the RAH-66 Comanche Helicopter acquisition program during these years. The research focused on the question of what significant events and issues have occurred over the course of the Comanche's development that have allowed it to remain a viable program. The research draws several conclusions from the analysis of the Comanche's history. Mainly, despite the significant duration of the program, a valid need for an armed reconnaissance platform still exists. Secondly, the innovative program management of Comanche has maintained a positive reputation for the program. Finally, the loss of Comanche at this point in time would severely impact the defense helicopter industrial base.

Modern Fighting Helicopters Bill Gunston, Mike Spick, 1998 This illustrated analysis of one of the premier combat weapons on the modern battlefield looks at the designs, weapons and tactics of 40 of today's military helicopters, including the Kamov Ka-50 and Ka-52 and the Boeing Sikorsky RAH-66 Comanche'

Comanche RAH-66-21st Century Multi-Mission Helicopter, 1996 The end of the Cold War did not bring an end to the challenges facing the defense of the United States. In fact, the world has become more unstable with the dismantling of the Soviet Union. The flow of sophisticated arms to anyone with hard currency has increased regional instability. Ethnic and religious strife has re-emerged. And as the armed forces of small countries acquire high technology weapons, the threat of eventual American involvement increases. Shrinking American defense budgets and reduced U.S. presence overseas will require a smaller, highly mobile Army. An Army that can rapidly deploy to trouble spots around the globe, find and defeat a wide range of threats, and be supportable in the field without a burdensome logistics tail. DoD studies reveal that battlefield success is heavily contingent on good reconnaissance. And Desert Storm proved that satellite and fixed wing reconnaissance assets cannot provide the close battle target information needed in highly fluid tactical situations. Neither can the Army's current light helicopter fleet. The OH-58, OH-6, and AH-1 light helicopters are over 30 years old when the first Comanche is fielded. They lack range, speed, payload, and agility. They are expensive to operate, especially in harsh desert environments. They lack low observable features necessary to operate and survive on the modern battlefield, and are vulnerable to ground fire. They cannot operate safely at night or in adverse weather. And, they cannot be upgraded to meet the challenges the U.S. will face in the future. Only RAH-66 Comanche has been designed to fulfill these requirements and enhance the effectiveness of Army Force Projections.

Special Operations Aviation Patrick Allen, 1999
This full-color book examines a number of these special operations aviation units, both past and present, which have provided, and continue to provide, such specialized support. Featured are the aircraft, unique equipment and technology, training, and the survivability and airmanship skills necessary to crew such aircraft. Also included are special operations aircraft of tomorrow, like the Bell/Boeing V22 Osprey, Boeing/Sikorsky RAH-66 Comanche, and Westland/Agusta EH101 Merlin.

United States Army Aviation Digest , 1991

The RAH-66 Comanche Helicopter Arthur W. Linden, 2021
On December 5, 2003, Lt. Gen Richard A. Cody, Army Deputy Chief of Staff and an experienced aviator, flew the Comanche. According to the January 2004 issue of National Defense he ...gave the aircraft a stellar review. ...Cody said that the Comanche had 'exceeded his expectations' and was particularly impressed by the rotor system, engine response and control. Cody also reportedly said the aircraft was 'easy to fly' and should be put into the hands of soldiers as soon as possible. Twelve weeks later the program was cancelled. So, what happened? How did Comanche become expendable? How did a program that was originally scheduled to enter Low Rate Initial Production in 1996 get delayed to 2011? How did an aircraft originally designed to replace the Army's light scout/attack fleet grow to become a virtual replacement for the much larger, heavier AH-64 Apache? This is a story of great accomplishment and much frustration. This is the Comanche history, as told by the some of the key members of the Comanche development team--

Finite Element Modeling of the RAH-66 Comanche Helicopter Tailcone Section Using Patran and Dytran Mark S. Gorak, Jeffrey A. Libby, 2001-06 The United States Army contracted Boeing-Sikorsky to develop the RAH- 66 Comanche, a new, armed reconnaissance helicopter that features stealth technology designed to improve survivability when operating in hostile environments. Ballistic testing is required on any new technology, to include the Comanche, prior to fielding. Computer based simulations are being employed to reduce the requirements for expensive live fire testing. This thesis uses computer programs called PATRAN and DYTRAN from MSC Software Corporation to build the model and simulate the effects of an explosive round detonating in the Comanche tailcone section. This thesis describes in great detail the process of creating and modifying the model in PATRAN to most accurately depict the Comanche tailcone section and creating the input decks for DYTRAN to run the analysis. A test case involving an explosion with a high amount of explosive energy, or specific internal energy (SIE) was simulated. From this test, several results are shown to display the capabilities of DYTRAN. These results, when compared with live fire data, can be used to validate the computer-based simulation in order to reduce the requirements of expensive live fire testing.

The Sikorsky Legacy Sergei I. Sikorsky, The Igor I. Sikorsky Historical Archives, 2007 This book traces the history of Sikorsky aviation and its founder, Igor I. Sikorsky, one of the most talented and versatile aeronautical pioneers in history. Sikorsky's aviation career spanned over 60 years and was highlighted by three major achievements: the creation of the world's first four-engine airliner; the record-breaking Clipper Ships, with which Pan American Airways explored transpacific and transatlantic airline service; and the development of the helicopter. Sikorsky then led his engineers out of the piston-engine era and into the jet age with the design and development of some of the most widely used turbine-powered helicopters in aviation history. More than 200 photographs, many from the Sikorsky family archives, document the genius of Sikorsky's intuitive engineering and his lifelong interest in the challenge of the helicopter, which many historians consider to be his crowning achievement.

Computerized Ballistic Modeling of the Comanche Tailfan Shroud Allen H. Stephan, 2000 The U.S. Army has contracted Boeing-Sikorsky to develop the RAH-66 Comanche, a new, armed reconnaissance helicopter that features stealth technology designed to improve survivability when operating in hostile environments. Ballistic testing is required on the Comanche prior to fielding. Computer based simulations are being employed in order to reduce requirements for expensive live-fire testing. This thesis uses a computer program called Dytran from MacNeal-Schwendler to simulate the effects of an explosive round detonating in the Comanche tailfan shroud. Six test cases involving explosions with varying amounts of explosive energy, or specific internal energy, are evaluated. From these tests, a curve showing the percentage of structural failure versus the specific internal energy is plotted. Assuming that 20% structural failure of the model equates to a catastrophic failure, this analysis shows that the analyzed section of the Comanche tailfan shroud can withstand an explosion with a specific 10^2 internal energy of 2.58×10^2 in Isec . Any potential threat rounds with specific internal energies greater than 2.58×10^{10} in²/sec² will pose serious threats to the Comanche.

American Military Helicopters and Vertical/Short Landing and Takeoff Aircraft Since 1941 E.R.

Johnson, Ted Williams, 2021-11-01 Over the past eight decades, developments in vertical lift aircraft--both helicopters and vertical/short takeoff and landing (V/STOL) planes--have given the American military unparalleled capabilities on the modern battlefield. The U.S. has led the world in vertical lift technologies with the help of some of the brightest minds in this field--Igor I. Sikorsky, Arthur M. Young, Frank N. Piasecki, Charles H. Kaman and Stanley Hiller, Jr., to name a few--and by having the industrial prowess to make their concepts reality. This book provides a concise historical survey, including technical specifications, drawings, and photographs of every type of helicopter and V/STOL aircraft developed for the U.S. military, from the earliest examples tested in 1941 and 1942, up to the newest prototypes.
