An Analysis of Critical Material Failures of the Close-In-Weapons-System Onboard U. S. Guided Missile Destroyers Jay H. Hughs, Matthew Carroll, Edward F. Arca, Naval Postgraduate Naval Postgraduate School, 2019-12-31 This thesis analyzes the current state of the Close-In Weapon System (CIWS) and decides what improvements can be used to improve system operational readiness and life-cycle support. Currently, CIWS is supported by a Readiness Based Sparing Model that has drawn criticism from senior naval leaders for the operational availability (Ao) that it provides. We analyze data to derive a list of five key offenders that heavily impact operational availability of CIWS. We also analyze how improving the sparing of these key offenders can potentially improve operational availability. Additionally, we analyze the timing of actual failures in the fleet. This paper addresses CIWS operational readiness and life-cycle support while exploring whether other processes can be used to improve the operational readiness of U.S. Guided Missile Destroyers' CIWS systems. The major findings of our research are as follows: first, that timing luck off failures accounted for a 7% difference between the worst-case scenario downtime and actual downtime. Second, that actual system availability was 86% of calendar days over fiscal years 2017 and 2018, exceeding NSWC's Ao predictions. Third, that the top five key offenders, which these parts can potentially affect, account for a 3% improvement to operational downtime. Finally, that 10 of the 67 ships showed no downtime associated with CIWS, which could be a result of operational schedules.

A Diagnostic Approach to Weapon System Lifecycle Support: The Phalanx Close-in Weapon System, 2009 This study discusses a diagnostic approach to examining the lifecycle support system of a weapon system specifically illustrating the approaches for the US Navy Phalanx Close-in Weapon System (CIWS). The study gauges the status of current readiness and analyzes a snapshot of cost structures. The study identifies the program's influential cost factors and system performance drivers. As a diagnostic approach to the lifecycle support of the Phalanx Weapon System, the study creates a hypergraph describing the relation between factors and drivers and their effect on operational readiness. The research also suggests areas for further study. The Phalanx Close-in Weapon System (CIWS) was developed and built by Raytheon Corporation to be a fast-reaction, rapid-fire, computer-controlled system with radar and Gatling gun designed to engage Anti-ship Missiles (ASM). The CIWS is also designed to defend against small, high-speed surface craft, helicopters, and general purpose aircraft in open waters, coastal waters or in port (Dutton, 2003). Phalanx is capable of searching, detecting, evaluating, acquiring, tracking, and firing against anti-ship missiles, and provides target destruction evaluation, automatic kill assessment, and cease-fire data to control train, elevation, and discharge of the weapon. Thus, CIWS is a complex device which engages in multiple functions often performed by separate and independent systems. CIWS has evolved substantially since its first inception. Since 1980, the original Block 0 has been improved multiple times. In the past few years, the Phalanx overhaul program began to accept Block 0 mounts and replace them with improved Block 1 systems. The reliability of the post-overhaul systems was as good as the benchmark of the Block 0 production systems and was greatly improved in comparison to the older systems. CIWS was upgraded as requirements evolved to meet emerging threats.

Handbook of Response to Intervention and Multi-Tiered Systems of Support Paige C. Pullen,Michael J. Kennedy,2018-10-04 Of the many issues facing special education (and general education) today, it is difficult to imagine one more important or timely than response to intervention (RTI). Almost overnight RTI has become standard practice across the nation. Unfortunately, RTI remains ill-defined, falls far short of its evidence-based practice goal, is almost invariably misused, and often results in more harm than good. Nevertheless, as a conceptual framework RTI has great potential for ensuring that students with disabilities receive appropriate, evidence-based instruction. The mission of this handbook is to present a comprehensive and integrated discussion of response to intervention (RTI) and its relation to multi-tiered systems of support (MTSS) in both special education and general education. Although the two terms are currently used interchangeably, distinct differences exist between them. Therefore, chapters are dedicated to distinguishing the two concepts—RTI and MTSS—and describing each one’s unique role in both general and special education. In addition, the authors recommend a third term, Multi-Tiered Instruction, to differentiate the practices related to the purpose of the specific intervention.
