United States. General Accounting Office

Future Needs in Deep Submergence Science National Research Council, Division on Earth and Life Studies, Ocean Studies Board, Committee on Future Needs in Deep Submergence Science, 2004-04-05 Deep-diving manned submersibles, such as Alvin, which gained worldwide fame when researchers used it to reach the wreck of the Titanic, have helped advance deep-ocean science. But many scholars in this field have noted that the number and capabilities of today's underwater vehicles no longer meet current scientific demands. At the same time, the relative value of manned and unmanned vehicles is often disputed. The report finds that new submersibles-both manned and unmanned-that are more capable than those in the current fleet are needed and would be of great value to the advancement of ocean research.

30,000 Leagues Undersea Thomas G. Vetter, 2015-04-10 Ever want something so much there is nothing you wouldn't do or give to get it? That happened to me. I wanted to be a Hydronaut, explorer of the ocean abyss. When I was a kid just old enough to consider the question, what do you want to be when you grow up? there were two U.S. space programs, both driven by the Cold War. NASA's sent men into orbit and for a time to the moon and back. Every kid alive then wanted to become an astronaut. But when I realized they'd never get out of orbit to live Hollywood space adventures on other planets in my lifetime, I wasn't one of them. But the U.S. Navy's Inner Space program was already exploring alien worlds. It regularly sent men into the abyss, a place much stranger and more hostile than the moon or Mars to explore and work. It, too, used science, cutting-edge technical innovations and clever improvisations to explore those hidden realms and thus come to understand the three-quarters of Earth undersea. The biggest difference between NASA and Navy was in the resources expended for mission success. NASA employed thousands of people and spent billions to conduct space missions. In contrast, for the dozens of deep submergence missions I later participated in, we had . . . me. I may be the only guy who ever set out as a boy to become a hydronaut and did. I had to plan for years, tailor my life, work way too hard, and damn-near die more than once to succeed. But as a hydronaut I DID enter alien worlds, encounter real aliens, make first discoveries and map regions never before explored. With one or two others, I went to places on Earth that no one before and no one else will ever journey. And it was my plans and my charts that took us there and brought us back. 30,000 Leagues Undersea: True Tales of a Submariner and Deep Submergence Pilot, tells the story of how I did it, and all that happened down there.

A Concept of Operations for a New Deep-diving Submarine F. W. LaCroix, Rand Corporation, 2002 By 2012, the reactor on the U.S. Navy's only deep-diving research submarine will be exhausted, making it necessary to either refuel the reactor or replace the submarine. If the Navy opts for a new submarine, what capabilities should it retain and what capabilities should be added? What would be its most important missions and what would be required for it to perform those missions? In this report, the authors worked with panels of qualified scientists, defense experts, and naval officers to develop a concept of operation for a possible replacement platform, analyzing which military and scientific missions should have the highest priorities. The authors conclude by offering a list of the highest-priority missions and two design concepts that would best be able to achieve them.

Deep Six David Huff, 2020-12-15 As the submarine moved through the water, at the speed of 50 knots, the mid-Atlantic ridge was the only reference point it needed to use based on the maps and charts borrowed from the U.S. Navy. The 10 man crew operated the Deep Submergence Vehicle (DSV) with precision as it made its way down through the darkness of the ocean, its front lights illuminating the way as it went deeper into the trench. The DSV's objective was to find the remains of the USS Dolphin, a nuclear Fast Attack submarine that disappeared in or around this area about a month ago. The USS Dolphin was one of three Sea Wolf class submarines in the Navy inventory with the capability to carry Tomahawk missiles and MK-48 torpedoes. Once again the adventure begins for a whole new set of people, when they start searching for the answers that will bring peace to the families of the sailors who lost their lives aboard the USS Dolphin. It was up to Tony and Chance and others to find the clues that would save other men and women as well.
