The Construction & Management of Small Gasworks Norton Henry Humphrys,1911

The Construction Management of Small Gasworks (Classic Reprint) Norton H. Humphrys,2015-07-21 Excerpt from The Construction Management of Small Gasworks The following pages are dedicated to my friends who come under the description of small gasworks managers as therein defined. They do not represent any attempt to add to the number of instruction books already available for the guidance of students or beginners. The object in view is to supply interesting matter for those actually in practice, who have not only had some training, but also more or less practical experience. The manager of a small gasworks frequently finds that he is one by himself. Even in this country there are out-of-the-way places where, for all practical purposes, one is as isolated as if he were out in the colonies, and men in such a position are usually found to be keenly interested in questions relating to the progress and advancement of the industry, and glad of an opportunity of discussing matters such as those to which attention is directed. They not only follow up modern advancements, but are quick to apply such as are suited to their limited circumstances; and it would be easy to name small gasworks that are in no way behind larger ones, so far as careful and intelligent management is concerned. Having these points in mind, I venture to hope that the following pages will receive a kindly and not hypercritical reception, as an endeavour to interest and assist the small gas manager. Modern Gasworks Practice (Classic Reprint) Alwyne Meade,2016-06-27 Excerpt from Modern Gasworks Practice The public supply of gas in this country is governed specifically by many local Acts of Parliament, and in general by the Gasworks Clauses Acts (1847 and the Sale of Gas Act (1859) and the Gas and Water Works Facilities Acts (1870 and In addition, London companies are also under the regulations of the Metro polis Gas Act of 1860. A statutory company has powers and obligations under its own special Act or Provisional Order, as well as being governed by the General Acts, which are incorporated therewith as a whole or in part. A Provisional Order may be granted to a non-statutory company under the Gas and, Water Works Facilities Acts authorizing the Company to supply gas and conferring the necessary incidental powers. The relation of such a non-statutory company with local authorities and with other statutory companies is similar to that of a statutory company. Stepney Gasworks Antony Francis,2010 The Commercial Gas Company set up its principal works in Stepney in the late 1830s and generated coal gas until the mid 20th century. As London expanded, the Stepney Works was transformed from a tiny site in rural surroundings into a massive industrial complex packed with buildings, including in 1864 the world's third largest gasholder. This book combines detailed recording of the surviving structures - the first such undertaken on a gasworks site - with analysis of previously unpublished reports, directors' minutes and other documentary evidence, so restoring the Commercial Gas Company to its rightful place in the turbulent history of London's gas industry.--Publisher's description.

Gasworks Recorders Leonard A. Levy,2016-08-24 Excerpt from Gasworks Recorders: Their Construction and Uses Progress in any branch of knowledge is intimately connected with improvements in the accuracy with which measurements appertaining to the branch of knowledge in question can be made. The advances in electrical engineering were largely in uenced by the development of measuring instruments, whereby the determination of the various quantities involved could be made with great accuracy. The same correlation holds true in the gas industry, and progress therein is largely determined by advances made in the science of measuring the various factors and. Quantities involved. Furthermore, it may be regarded as axiomatic that in every case in which an instrument is employed, additional advantages accrue if an automatic instrument, preferably a recorder of equal accuracy, can be employed.
