Lance Missile Launcher Stability Tests Grady W. Leese,Joseph L. Decell,ARMY ENGINEER WATERWAYS EXPERIMENT STATION VICKSBURG MS.,United States. Army Materiel Command,Waterways Experiment Station (U.S.),1967 Tests were conducted to determine the stability of aim of the Lance missile system when launchers are emplaced on various types of ground surfaces and under various wind conditions. A simulated Lance missile, a lightweight launcher, and a self-propelled launcher (tracked vehicle) were furnished by the U.S. Army Missile Command, Redstone Arsenal, Ala. Full-scale tests of the missile and launchers were conducted with the WES wind-generating machine to determine: (a) the ability to maintain the missile's point of aim when its launcher is placed on various types of ground surfaces and exposed to various wind conditions, (b) how the point of aim deviates with time under these various soil and wind conditions, and (c) the vertical loads on the lightweight launcher's jack pads caused by the wind. In the tests it was found that the missile's maximum movements while on the lightweight launcher were 0.561 mil horizontally and 0.305 mil vertically when referenced to the ground, which indicates excessive looseness and/or flexibility in the framework of the lightweight launcher. No settlement occurred during tests on the lightweight or self-propelled launchers placed on clay soil subgrades either during tests or between test series. Based on the results of these tests, it is believed that a subgrade possessing CBR values of 2 and greater will not permit either launcher to settle to the degree that the missile's point of aim deviates beyond an acceptable limit. Operator, Aviation Unit, and Intermediate Maintenance Manual (including Repair Parts and Special Tools) for Hydra 70 Rocket Launchers ,1992

Katyusha Jamie Prenatt,2016-06-16 An illustrated study of the fearsome multiple rocket launchers which are forever associated with the Soviet Red Army and modern Russia's armed forces. Although military rockets have been used since the Middle Ages, it was not until the Soviet Union pioneered the concept of Multiple Rocket Launchers (MRLs) in the late 1930s that they emerged as a decisive weapon. In the modern era, these Soviet/Russian Katyushas have served in combat in Afghanistan, Chechnya, and Georgia. Developed to fill the operational need for massed artillery fire support, the MRL possesses enormous destructive power and a devastating psychological impact. Fully illustrated with photographs and artwork, this New Vanguard provides a survey of Soviet and Russian Federation MRLs from the beginning of their development in 1941 to the present. It focuses on the history, design, and specifications of self-propelled ground MRL systems, but also covers towed, static, railway, and naval mounts. It highlights the many variants of the principal systems and include MRL unit tables of organization and equipment, information on MRL munition types, and coverage of dedicated MRL resupply vehicles.

3.5-Inch Rocket Launcher Super Bazooka Field Manual: FM 23-32 Department of the Army, 2013-10 The 3.5-inch rocket launcher, also known as the super bazooka, was introduced in early 1950 and saw considerable action throughout the Korean War. The success of the powerful German Panzerschreck 88mm anti-tank rocket caused the United States to completely rethink the bazooka at the close of World War II. Based on the Panzerschreck's design, the M20 was significantly larger than the 2.36-inch bazooka of WWII. Though bearing a superficial resemblance to the Nazi weapon, the M20 had greater effective range, power and accuracy. The M20 was a two-piece, smooth-bore weapon weighing only twelve pounds with an assembled length of sixty inches. It fired a shaped charge that concentrated the force of the explosion on a very small area, thus allowing the projectile to penetrate armor plate as thick as eleven inches. It boasted a range of up to 900 yards. In addition to the M20 model, the Army produced further developments designated M20A1/A1B1 and M20B1. Similar to the M20, they boasted various simplified components including latch assemblies, and in the case of the M20B1 aluminum barrels. Created in 1961, this field manual reveals a great deal about the 3.5-inch rocket launcher M20A1 and M20A1B1's design and capabilities. Intended as a manual for those charged with operation and maintenance, it details many aspects of its controls, ammunition and sighting equipment. Originally labeled restricted, this manual was declassified long ago and is here reprinted in book form. Care has been taken to preserve the integrity of the text.

3.5-inch Rocket Launcher United States. Department of the Army, 1961 This manual describes the characteristics, functioning, maintenance, steps of preparatory marksmanship, technique of fire, and range control for the standard rocket launchers, M20A1 and M20A1B1.
