Bayesian Multiple Target Tracking, Second Edition Lawrence D. Stone, Roy L. Streit, Thomas L. Corwin, Kristine L. Bell, 2013-12-01

This second edition has undergone substantial revision from the 1999 first edition, recognizing that a lot has changed in the multiple target tracking field. One of the most dramatic changes is in the widespread use of particle filters to implement nonlinear, non-Gaussian Bayesian trackers. This book views multiple target tracking as a Bayesian inference problem. Within this framework it develops the theory of single target tracking, multiple target tracking, and likelihood ratio detection and tracking. In addition to providing a detailed description of a basic particle filter that implements the Bayesian single target recursion, this resource provides numerous examples that involve the use of particle filters. With these examples illustrating the developed concepts, algorithms, and approaches -- the book helps radar engineers develop tracking solutions when observations are non-linear functions of target state, when the target state distributions or measurement error distributions are not Gaussian, in low data rate and low signal to noise ratio situations, and when notions of contact and association are merged or unresolved among more than one target.

Designing Multi-Target Drugs J. Richard Morphy,C John Harris,2012-03-28 Multi-target drug discovery (MTDD) is an emerging area of increasing interest to the drug discovery community. Drugs that modulate several targets have the potential for an improved balance of efficacy and safety compared to single targets agents. Although there are a number of marketed drugs that are thought to derive their therapeutic benefit by virtue of interacting with multiple targets, the majority of these were discovered accidentally. Written by world renowned experts, this is the first book to gather together knowledge and experiences of the rational discovery of multi-target drugs. It describes the current state of the art, the achievements and the challenges of the field and importantly the lessons learned by researchers to date and their application to future MTDD.

Computational and Experimental Approaches in Multi-Target Pharmacology, 2017 The next frontier in pharmacology is the development of multi-target strategies in which pathological processes are controlled by pharmacologically manipulating them at many different points at once. Designing multi-target strategies will require deep understanding of the complex physiology that underlies pathological processes. It will also require the development of single drugs with multiple targets, or combinations of drugs with compatible pharmacokinetics that work synergistically to maximize desirable effects while minimizing unwanted side effects. This e-Book contains ten original articles, each addressing a different aspect of this challenge. Together they open new perspectives and show the way forward in the development of multi-target therapeutics.

Abstract: While various online multi-target tracking methods have been proposed recently, most of their runtime speed struggle at 1-10 frames per second for moderate crowded scenes. In this thesis, we present a novel real-time multi-target tracking system based on the tracking-by-detection framework. Our system is designed for tracking a variable number of interacting targets from a single, static, above shoulder camera, which is a general setting for video surveillance. One challenge in our approach is that when background subtraction is used for detecting moving targets, merged measurements occur frequently because of target interactions. To cope with the problem, we propose to use correlation filter based object detector to robustly separate the targets in merged measurements. Then, online object tracking assisted data association is used to solve the track-measurement assignment. To reduce computation load, our object tracking algorithm is assisted by correlations filter based trackers which share the same features used by our object detector. In addition, to recover partially occluded targets, we allow unconfident detections to be assigned to tracks whilst care is taken to avoid introducing additional false positives. We also analyze the online approximation to multi-channel correlation filters. Our experiments show that exact solution is more resistant to noisy channels than approximate solution. Evaluation on generally accepted datasets reveals that the proposed system is comparable to state-of-the-art methods in terms of performance while running several magnitudes faster. Additionally, we show that the proposed system can be readily implemented on the Texas Instruments TMS320C6678 DSP (C6678) without significant degradation in speed or performance. Details on efficient implementation of the system is also discussed. Especially, for computing Histogram of Oriented Gradients (HOG) feature, our optimized implementation runs at 60fps on VGA images on a single core of C6678, which is 10 times faster than a directly ported implementation. MT-PPRC provides the capability to have two PPRC relationships on a single primary volume. With this enhancement, there can be another target available to provide additional data protection to act as a backup if a disaster occurs. This IBM Redpaper™ publication provides practical information about the characteristics and functions of the IBM DS8000® Multiple Target Peer-to-Peer Remote Copy (MT-PPRC). The paper includes scenarios that illustrate the implementation and use of different topologies, as well as enhanced migration scenarios.
