

Personnel Armor System For Ground Troops

Mark A. Reynosa

Personnel Armor System Ground Troops Helmet Mark A. Reynosa,1999 This book presents the history of the U.S. military's current issue helmet - the PASGT (pass-get) Helmet - and provides the most comprehensive look into the research, development, and production of the helmet between 1971 and the present. All aspects of the PASGT Helmet are covered, including the early research and development efforts that resulted in the final helmet design and construction. The book supplements coverage of this early period with photographs of the various helmets. The book also provides a detailed look at helmet production, including the ground troop's helmet, parachutist's helmet, and helmet covers. The production history of every major manufacturer is also provided. Every production helmet is covered with full color photographs, including details and production markings. Also included are contract sheets and military specification drawings. AUTHOR:

Blunt Impact Performance Characteristics of the Advanced Combat Helmet and the Paratrooper and Infantry Personnel Armor System for Ground Troops Helmet , 2005 Protective helmets are typically required to absorb energy in order to reduce head injury risk during blunt impact events. The energy-absorbing mechanism must be robust enough to reduce the impact energy to a low-injury probability level throughout a realistic range of impact velocities and environmental temperatures, regardless of the helmet impact site. The Advanced Combat Helmet (ACH) is configured with fitting pads that possess the capability to attenuate limited blunt head impact forces. Prior combat helmets were not required by their governing specifications to provide any tested levels of blunt impact protection. To obtain further information, a series of blunt impact tests were conducted with the ACH and the paratrooper and infantry versions of the PASGT helmet. The helmets were tested at two impact velocities, three environmental temperatures, and seven impact sites with two successive impacts. The performance of each was characterized by the transmitted acceleration measured within a standard head form and compared against the recommended threshold for mean and maximum acceleration.

Analysis of the Effects of Body Armor and Load-Carrying Equipment on Soldiers' Movements. Part 2. Armor Vest and Load-Carrying Equipment Assessment, 1997 This is one of three reports of a study on the effects of the Personnel Armor System for Ground Troops (PASGT) vest and a prototype armor vest and two types of fighting loads on soldiers' movements. The fighting loads were the All-Purpose Lightweight Individual Carrying Equipment (ALICE) and the tactical load-bearing vest. Twelve male soldiers performed seven planar movements and a walking task while wearing the vests and fighting loads with either a T-shirt and shorts or the Temperate Battledress Uniform (BDU). Two measurement methods were applied to quantify the extent of the movements, one of which was a video and computer based technique. This report contains results of the effects of the vest and fighting load designs on the planar movements, as quantified using the video technique. It was found that the prototype vest imposed less restriction on movement than the PASGT vest did. Range of motion with the tactical load bearing vest was also equal to or better than that with the ALICE. A second report (NATICK/TR-98/002) contains comparisons of the data acquired on the planar movements using the two measurement techniques, and a third report (NATICK/TR-98/004) contains findings from the video-based analysis of gait.

Defense Logistics William M. Solis, 2007-08 Since 2003, to provide protection from ballistic threats, U.S. Central Command, which is responsible for operations in Iraq & Afghanistan & other areas, has required service members & DoD civilians in its area of operations to be issued the Interceptor Body Armor (IBA) system. Concerns regarding the level of protection & amount of IBA needed to protect U.S. forces have occurred in recent years. This review determines to what extent the Army & Marine Corps: (1) are meeting the theater requirements for body armor; (2) have the controls in place to assure that the manufacturing & fielding of body armor meet requirements; & (3) are sharing information regarding their efforts on body armor ballistic requirements & testing. Analysis of the Effects of Body Armor and Load-carrying Equipment on Soldiers' Movements. Part 3. Gait Analysis, 1997 This is one of three reports of a study on the effects of armor vests and fighting loads on soldiers' movements. Twelve male soldiers performed seven planar movements and a walking task while wearing the vests and fighting loads with either a T-shirt and shorts or the Temperate Battledress Uniform (BDU). Two measurement methods were applied to quantify the extent of the movements, one of which was a video and computer based technique. This report contains results of the analyses of self paced walking, as quantified using the video technique. Temporal and kinematic variables were measured to compare gait patterns and body postures of the soldiers wearing the BDU alone and in combination with the Personnel Armor System for Ground Troops (PASGT) vest and the All-Purpose Lightweight Individual Carrying Equipment (ALICE) fighting load. It was found that use of the armor vest and the fighting load increased left support and double support stride periods, decreased the range of trunk tilt angle, and increased the range of vertical displacement of the hip. A second report (NATICK/TR-98/002) contains comparisons of the data acquired on the planar movements using the two measurement techniques, and a third report (NATICK/TR-98/003) contains results of the effects of the vest and fighting load designs on the planar movements.

Review of Department of Defense Test Protocols for Combat Helmets National Research Council, Division on Engineering and Physical Sciences, Board on Army Science and Technology, Committee on Review of Test Protocols Used by the DoD to Test Combat Helmets, 2014-03-31 Combat helmets have evolved considerably over the years from those used in World War I to today's Advanced Combat Helmet. One of the key advances was the development of aramid fibers in the 1960s, which led to today's Kevlar-based helmets. The Department of Defense is continuing to invest in research to improve helmet performance, through better design and materials as well as better manufacturing processes. Review of the Department of Defense Test Protocols for Combat Helmets considers the technical issues relating to test protocols for military combat helmets. At the request of the DOD Director of Operational Test and Evaluation, this report evaluates the adequacy of the Advanced Combat Helmet test protocol for both first article testing and lot acceptance testing, including its use of the metrics of probability of no penetration and the upper tolerance limit (used to evaluate backface deformation). The report evaluates appropriate use of statistical techniques in gathering data; adequacy of current helmet testing procedures; procedures for the conduct of additional analysis of penetration and backface deformation data; and scope of characterization testing relative to the benefit of the information obtained.

Testing of Body Armor Materials National Research Council, Division of Behavioral and Social Sciences and Education, Committee on National Statistics, Division on Engineering and Physical Sciences, Board on Army Science and Technology, Committee on Testing of Body Armor Materials for Use by the U.S. Army—“Phase III, 2012-07-21 In 2009, the Government Accountability Office (GAO) released the report Warfighter Support: Independent Expert Assessment of Army Body Armor Test Results and Procedures Needed Before Fielding, which commented on the conduct of the test procedures governing acceptance of body armor vest-plate inserts worn by military service members. This GAO report, as well as other observations, led the Department of Defense Director, Operational Test & Evaluation, to request that the National Research Council (NRC) Division on Engineering and Physical Sciences conduct a three-phase study to investigate issues related to the testing of body armor materials for use by the U.S. Army and other military departments. Phase I and II resulted in two NRC letter reports: one in 2009 and one in 2010. This report is Phase III in the study. Testing of Body Armor Materials: Phase III provides a roadmap to reduce the variability of clay processes and shows how to migrate from clay to future solutions, as well as considers the use of statistics to permit a more scientific determination of sample sizes to be used in body armor testing. This report also develops ideas for revising or replacing the Prather study methodology, as well as reviews comments on methodologies and technical approaches to military helmet testing. Testing of Body Armor Materials: Phase III also considers the possibility of combining various national body armor testing standards.

Opportunities in Protection Materials Science and Technology for Future Army Applications
National Research Council, Division on Engineering and Physical Sciences, Board on Army Science and Technology, National Materials Advisory Board, Committee on Opportunities in Protection Materials Science and Technology for Future Army Applications, 2011-08-27
Armor plays a significant role in the protection of warriors. During the course of history, the introduction of new materials and improvements in the materials already used to construct armor has led to better protection and a reduction in the weight of the armor. But even with such advances in materials, the weight of the armor required to manage threats of ever-increasing destructive capability presents a huge challenge. Opportunities in Protection Materials Science and Technology for Future Army Applications explores the current theoretical and experimental understanding of the key issues surrounding protection materials, identifies the major challenges and technical gaps for developing the future generation of lightweight protection materials, and recommends a path forward for their development. It examines multiscale shockwave energy transfer mechanisms and experimental approaches for their characterization over short timescales, as well as multiscale modeling techniques to predict mechanisms for dissipating energy. The report also considers exemplary threats and design philosophy for the three key applications of armor systems: (1) personnel protection, including body armor and helmets, (2) vehicle armor, and (3) transparent armor. Opportunities in Protection Materials Science and Technology for Future Army Applications recommends that the Department of Defense (DoD) establish a defense initiative for protection materials by design (PMD), with associated funding lines for basic and applied research. The PMD initiative should include a combination of computational, experimental, and materials testing, characterization, and processing research conducted by government, industry, and academia.

Defense Logistics, 2007 In recent years, a number of reports and newspaper articles have cited concerns regarding the level of protection and the available amounts of body armor to protect deployed service members. As part of GAO's efforts to monitor the Department of Defense's (DoD) and the services' action to protect ground forces, GAO reviewed the Army and Marine Corps' actions to address these concerns. On April 26, 2007, GAO issued a report regarding the Army and the Marine Corps' individual body armor systems. Today's testimony summarizes the report's findings regarding the extent to which the Army and Marine Corps have done the following: (1) have met the theater requirements for body armor, (2) have the controls in place to assure that the manufacturing and fielding of body armor meet requirements, and (3) have shared information regarding their efforts on body armor ballistic requirements and testing. The report also included additional information concerning whether contractors or non-DoD civilians obtain body armor in the same way as U.S. forces and DoD civilians given the number of contractors and non-DoD civilians in CENTCOM's area of operation. GAO did not make recommendations in the report. DoD officials did not provide written comments on the report but technical comments were incorporated as appropriate.
