The Hand Grenade Gordon L. Rottman, 2015-02-20 Allowing the user to inflict damage on his opponent within throwing range without leaving cover, the portable, lethally efficient hand grenade is a ubiquitous weapon of modern warfare, and has now found its way into law-enforcement arsenals too. Featuring specially commissioned full-colour artwork and an array of revealing photographs of grenades in use and in close-up, this engaging study explores and assesses the origins, development, combat use, and lasting legacy of the formidable military hand grenade.

Chemical Characterization of the Pyrotechnically Disseminated M83-PE Smoke Grenades ,2003 To reduce the possibility of flaming, the smoke formulation for the M83 smoke grenade has been modified by the addition of a burn retardant, pentaerythritol (PE). These M83-PE grenades were chemically characterized to qualitatively and quantitatively determine the combustion products produced with the addition of PE. Data was needed prior to material release and for incorporation into the item's Life Cycle Environmental Assessment (LCEA). Similar to other terephthalic acid (TA) based smokes, benzene, formaldehyde, and carbon monoxide were the principal compounds observed of toxicological concern. A comparison is made between the M83-PE and the M83 smoke grenades, which shows that benzene appears to be lower in the PE grenades; but, formaldehyde appears to be higher. All concentrations exceed the currently accepted American Conference of Government Industrial Hygienists (ACGIH) Threshold Limit Values (TLV'S). Carbon monoxide and carbon dioxide levels decreased between the M83 grenades and M83-PE grenades, whereas concentrations for sulfur oxides and nitrogen oxides appeared to be unaffected. Analysis of the particle size data between the M83-PE and M83 grenades show that they both have MMAD's

Pyrotechnics Health Risk Assessment NO. 39-EJ-1485-00 Residential Exposure from Inhalation of Air Emissions from the M18 Red-Colored Smoke Grenade ,2000

This assessment evaluated the potential for human health effects to offsite residents breathing air emissions following use of the M18 Red-Colored Smoke Grenades. This document presents the evaluation of the potential for adverse human health effects to the offsite residents breathing air emissions following the use of military firing ranges during training exercises. Study results showed no potential for health risks to the hypothetical resident from inhalation of air emissions from the smoke grenades. To conduct this study, air emissions from the smoke grenades were collected in a test chamber (West Desert Test Center, Dugway Proving Ground, UT). This information was then used in an air dispersion model to determine ambient air concentrations at a location downwind from the site where the item was activated. Modeled air concentrations were combined with exposure information to estimate the amount of substances the hypothetical resident breathes. This intake was combined with the substance's health information, to determine if there is a potential for health risks from inhalation of these substances. The health risk included both long-term and short term exposures to the modeled substance concentrations. Study results showed no potential for health risks from inhalation of air emissions from the M18 Red-Colored Smoke Grenade.

Toxicity of Military Smokes and Obscurants National Research Council, Division on Earth and Life Studies, Commission on Life Sciences, Subcommittee on Military Smokes and Obscurants, 1999-09-24 A variety of smokes and obscurants have been developed and used to screen armed forces from view, signal friendly forces, and mark positions. Smokes are produced by burning or vaporizing particular products. Obscurants are anthropogenic or naturally occurring particles suspended in the air. They block or weaken transmission of particular parts of the electromagnetic spectrum, such as visible and infrared radiation or microwaves. Fog, mist, and dust are examples of natural obscurants. White phosphorus and hexachloroethane smokes are examples of anthropogenic obscurants. The U.S. Army seeks to reduce the likelihood that exposure to smokes and obscurants during training would have adverse health effects on military personnel or civilians. To protect the health of exposed individuals, the Office of the Army Surgeon General requested that the National Research Council (NRC) independently review data on the toxicity of smokes and obscurants and recommend exposure guidance levels for military personnel in training and for the general public residing or working near military-training facilities.

Level ii audit of terephthalic acid smoke grenade manufacturing process ,1997 Meeting environmental requirements with the currently installed technologies is a problem common to the existing DOD industrial base. Compliance with environmental law is becoming significantly expensive for Army installations. This study was undertaken to provide Army installations with methods to meet pollution regulations by reducing the formation of waste, including stack gas, from energy production. An understanding of the energy-use patterns and options in the production sites, combined with innovative and effective methodologies, can help identify energy and emission reduction opportunities. In 1996, the U.S. Army Construction Engineering Research Laboratories (USACERL) sponsored a 3-day Level I Process Energy Review and Process Energy and Pollution Reduction workshop at Pine Bluff Arsenal, AK. The specific area defined for the process improvement and energy reduction activities was the terephthalic acid (TA) smoke grenade process. The review and workshop provided training to site technical personnel to analyze existing manufacturing processes, and to identify process changes that improve energy efficiency, raw material use, plant capacity, product quality, and environmental advantages. This study performed a Level II audit of TA smoke manufacturing to optimize capacity and energy, and environmental performance of that process.
