Stoat Captures in a Year of Heavy Mountain Beech

Seedfall Andrea E. Byrom, New Zealand. Department of Conservation, 2004-03-01 Reinvasion by (primarily juvenile) stoats (Mustela erminea) into stoat control areas is a major problem for the Department of Conservation. To investigate dispersal and survival of juvenile stoats in South Island mountain beech forest at Craigieburn, baited traplines were set for adult females in late winter and for juveniles in spring of 2002. Despite a heavy seedfall of mountain beech in the preceeding autumn and an associated increase in rodent numbers, catches of stoats did not show a significant increase. The project was terminated in January 2003 because of the low catch of stoats. A summary of the numbers and sexes of stoats captured, as well as stoat capture rates, is provided for future reference.

The Stoat Rebellion Aubrey Fossedale,

Stoat Artificial Reproductive Technologies

Susana La Falci, Frank Molinia, 2007-01-01

Artificial reproductive technologies in stoats (Mustela erminea) are currently being developed in New Zealand to control and manipulate stoat reproduction in captivity. In this study, methods were established for liquid (short-term) and frozen (long-term) storage of stoat sperm. Frozen-thawed sperm were shown to be biologically competent in vitro, based on the maintenance of sperm motility and acrosome integrity after culture. A non-surgical artificial insemination technique is in development to confirm that frozen-thawed stoat sperm are capable of fertilising eggs in vivo, but its success is reliant on developing methods of inducing ovulation in females. Ovulated eggs and embryos were only recovered after mating oestrous females. Treatment of anoestrous females with pregnant mare serum gonadotrophin (PMSG) did not reliably stimulate ovarian follicle development and failed to induce ovulation. Treatment of oestrous females with PMSG did not improve the reliability and yield of eggs and embryos recovered after natural mating, or their capacity to develop in vitro compared with untreated controls. For the first time, in vitro culture and the development of in vivo derived one- to four-cell embryos to the blastocyst stage was achieved in stoats, with up to 8% of these hatching. This culture system did not support the viability of diapausing blastocysts in vitro, suggesting that alternative substrates, nutrients and/or co-culture with uterine cell layers may be required. The findings from this study will enhance our ability to breed stoats in captivity and will help establish robust protocols for efficient testing and prioritisation of reproduction-based targets for stoat fertility control.

In The Grip Of Winter Colin Dann, 2011-09-30 In the depths of winter, with snow thick on the ground, Badger lies alone and injured. No one knows where he is, and the icy cold is tightening its grip every second. What will happen to Badger? And can the other animals of Farthing Wood survive the harsh cold and piercing hunger that winter has brought?

The Natural History of Weasels & Stoats Carolyn M. King, 1989 A comprehensive treatment of the fierce little predators: physical description, life cycle and span, evolution, hunting and reproduction behavior, population dynamics, the impact on their prey, diseases, and their relation to humans (mostly as pests, i.e. competitors). The color plates are informative, but the line drawing are marvelous. Annotation c. Book News, Inc., Portland, OR (booknews.com).

A Stoat Called Longfellow Trevor Smith, 2019-07-25 When Longfellow the Stoat wakes up on a snowy day and wants an egg for breakfast, he has to cross the farmyard and brave the wrath of Pint, the farmer's Jack Russell dog. All seems well until the horse, Cobweb, unwittingly sounds the alarm and Pint wakes up and gives chase. Longfellow finds a safe refuge, but soon something worse comes calling. Longfellow runs away - but then something even worse arrives! Can little Longfellow get safely to his home in the dry stone wall? A charming, beautifully illustrated tale to help young readers understand the countryside.

The Goat and the Stoat and the Boat Em

Lynas,2024-04-02 Stoat is very happy alone in a boat when along comes Goat. In a colorful coat...determined to float WITH Stoat and SHARE the boat. When Stoat tries to chase Goat out of the boat, it becomes trickier to stay afloat. Uh-oh! Will Stoat and Goat end up in the moat? And will Goat's colorful coat be ruined? Featuring a hilarious, tongue-twister text, slapstick humor, bright neon artwork, and colorful characters.

Environmental Predictors of Stoat (Mustela Erminea) and Ship Rat (Rattus Rattus) Capture Success J. E. Christie,New Zealand. Department of Conservation,2009-01-01 The association between capture success of stoats (Mustela erminea) and ship rats (Rattus rattus) and landscape-scale environmental predictors was explored using trapping data from three stoat control areas located in podocarp/broadleaved forest in New Zealand. Stoat capture success was higher at trap sites where a rat was also captured at the same trap or a stoat was captured at a neighbouring trap. Drier trap sites with good soil drainage and increased proximity to the operational trapping boundary were also associated with increased stoat capture. Rat capture success was higher at trap sites where a rat had been captured at a neighbouring trap, and at trap sites that were on steeper ground, more easterly facing and within forest habitat. Trap sites with generally poor soil conditions, i.e. sites with lower soil calcium levels and wetter sites with poor drainage, and increasing distance from the forest edge were also associated with increased rat capture. There were highly variable relationships between rat and stoat capture and landscape-scale environmental predictors between the three stoat control areas. This could be due to differing topography, but also to the highly correlated nature of many of the topographic, climate and habitat predictors. Further research specifically designed to separate these effects should focus on the variables identified as common between all stoat control areas in this study. Additional investigations of whether rats captured in double trap sets act as additional bait for stoats would have practical benefits for stoat control areas. The variability of the results emphasises the importance of ensuring that traps are abundant and widespread in stoat control operations.

Stoat Zona Pellucida Genes with Potential for Immunocontraceptive Biocontrol in New Zealand

Ronald J. Jackson, Sandra Beaton, David James Dall, New Zealand. Department of Conservation, 2007-01-01 Prospective methods for control of stoats (Mustela erminea) and other vertebrate pests in New Zealand include use of virally-vectored immunocontraception (VVIC) as a tool for broad-scale suppression of their reproduction. In this report, we provide the complete stoat and ferret (M. putorius furo) zona pellucida C (ZPC) and stoat ZPB complementary DNA (cDNA) and protein sequences, together with partial coding sequence for putative stoat ZPA protein. Stoat ZPC protein expressed in a vacciniabased system was specifically recognised by rabbit anti-porcine whole zona pellucida immune serum. We suggest that primer sequences used in this study could be used to isolate zona pellucida-coding sequences from other mustelid species. We also review prospective viral vectors for antigen delivery to stoats, and conclude that canine adenovirus-1 warrants further examination for its suitability for use.
