Report of the Bombay Chamber of Commerce Bombay Chamber of Commerce,1915

Behavior of Construction Adhesives Under Long-term Load Bryan H. River,Robert H. Gillespie,1981 Six construction adhesives and a conventional polyvinyl acetate adhesive were placed under dead load at five stress levels and three temperatures for 2 months. The shear slip was measured after 10, 100, 1,000, 10,000, and 100,000 minutes (70 days) under load. The results show four general types of behavior. Three construction adhesives with crosslinking capability had fair resistance to creep and showed evidence that a creep limit might be reached under moderate dead load and environmental conditions. Two adhesives had very poor creep resistance and failed under moderate dead load and environmental conditions. The sixth adhesive was extremely flexible but with excellent recovery capability. A polyvinyl acetate adhesive was not observed to creep under the low humidity conditions of this study. Adhesives showing evidence of a creep limit may be useful for long-term design loads, but further study of their behavior, especially under varying moisture conditions, is required. (Author).
