Report of the Science Steering Group for a Tropical Rainfall Measuring Mission (TRMM) Tropical Rainfall Measuring Mission. Science Steering Group,1988 The Tropical Rainfall Measuring Mission (TRMM), a satellite program now being studied jointly by the United States and Japan, would carry out the systematic study of tropical rainfall required for major strides in weather and climate research ... This report presents the scientific justification for TRMM and outlines the implementation process for the scientific community.--Preface.

Storm World Chris C. Mooney,2007 One of the leading environmental journalists and bloggers working today, Chris Mooney delves into a red-hot debate in global meteorology and weather forecasting: whether the increasing ferocity and frequency of hurricanes are connected to global warming. In the wake of Katrina, Mooney follows the lives and careers of the two leading scientists on either side of the debate through the 2006 hurricane season, tracing how government, the media, big business, and politics influence the ways in which weather patterns are predicted, charted, and even defined. Mooney written a fascinating and urgently compelling book that calls into question the great inconvenient truth of our day: Are we responsible for making hurricanes even bigger monsters than they already are?

Selected Urban Storm Water Runoff Abstracts Franklin Institute (Philadelphia, Pa.). Science Information Service,1969

The Use of Satellite Microwave Rainfall Measurements to Predict Eastern North Pacific Tropical Cyclone Intensity Derek A. West,1998 This proposed study examines the potential use of satellite passive microwave rainfall measurements derived from Special Sensor Microwave/Imager (SSM/I) radiometers onboard the Defense Meteorological Satellite Program (DMSP) constellation to improve eastern North Pacific Ocean tropical cyclone intensity change forecasting techniques. Relationships between parameters obtained from an operational SSM/I-based rainfall measuring algorithm and 12-, 24-, 36-, 48-, 60- and 72-hour intensity changes from best track data records are examined in an effort to identify statistically significant predictors of intensity change. Correlations between rainfall parameters and intensity change are analyzed using tropical cyclone data from three years, 1992 to 1994. Stratifications based upon tropical cyclone intensity, rate of intensity change, climatology, translation, landfall and synoptic-scale environmental forcing variables are studied to understand factors that may affect a statistical relationship between rainfall parameters and intensity change. The predictive skill of statistically significant rainfall parameters is assessed by using independent tropical cyclone data from another year, 1995. In addition, case studies on individual tropical cyclones are conducted to gain insight on predictive performance and operational implementation issues.

Measurements of the Interplanetary Solar Wind During the Large Geomagnetic Storm of April 17-18, 1965 J. T. Gosling,J. R. Asbridge,S. J. Bame,A. J. Hundhausen,I. B. Strong,1967 During the large geomagnetic storm of April 17-18, 1965, measurements of the solar wind were made with electrostatic analyzers on the Vela 2 satellites. A number of the observed solar wind changes can be related to worldwide geomagnetic changes; the most impressive event occurred after the main phase development when a fivefold increase in the solar wind density resulted in a sudden geomagnetic impulse. During the initial phase of the storm the plasma measurements were not complete, but the evidence indicates that the wind pressure increased at the time of the sudden commencement, and other features of the initial phase seem to have been related to solar wind changes. However, the main phase of the storm developed during a period when the solar wind remained relatively steady; further, there was nothing abnormal about the magnitude of the velocity, temperature, or proton density at that time. The [alpha]-particle flux during this period was higher than usual. The storm recovery was characterized by a period of rising solar wind velocity and temperature.

Hurricane Hunters Christine Dugan,2012-01-27 Uses statistics to discuss the science of hurricane chasing, the people who follow these storms, the instruments used, how hurricanes are named, and where they are found.

Learning from the Impacts of Superstorm Sandy J. Bret Bennington,E. Christa Farmer,2014-10-31 Learning from the Impacts of Superstorm Sandy summarizes first results from studies of Superstorm Sandy, including: tide gauge measurements of storm surge, stable isotope variation in precipitation, analysis of the effect of beach nourishment among other factors on structural damage, and comparison with past storms through sediment analysis. This book gives a multi-dimensional treatment of scientific results of studies of Superstorm Sandy, and it is a valuable reference for oceanographers, coastal geologists, climatologists, dynamic meteorologists, paleotempestologists, sedimentary geologists, geomorphologists and emergency managers who need to better understand the storm and its effects in order to be prepared for similar events in the future.
