The USAR as a Relevant Force Today, in Army XXI and for the Army After Next Denis J. Petcovic,1997 Since the concept of an American Federal Reserve Force originated with General George Washington, the United States Army Reserve (USAR) has steadily evolved into the relevant and engaged force of today. The USAR of today provides the US Army with the preponderance of its combat service and combat service support, echelons above corps and division forces. This USAR supports the National Security and Military Strategies through worldwide deployments and the accomplishment of a wide variety of domestic missions. A critical element to this future success of the USAR is the availability and placement of the Full Time Support force. The USAR will continue as an integrated partner in Army XXI and for the Army After Next.

The Gatherer SFC Tammy J. Goodwin, USAR,2015-12-18 When my mother and stepfather signed me up to join the army at the age of seventeen, I don't really remember my reaction. I do remember that I had no idea what the army was. I had never been more than ten miles up or down the road, and that was mostly from riding the school bus. My life at that time consisted of books. If the paper had words on it, then it was in my hands. I loved stories. I loved the way the story would allow me to feel the emotion of the experience coming off the paper. For example, my seven-year-old nephew asked me one day, Do you want to see my imagination? I instantly said, Yes, yes I would. Through the years, the army provided the opportunity to experience different cultures and meet some amazing people. I invite you to turn the page, and as you read, use your imagination to see and feel my experiences, starting with my second deployment to Iraq.

Is the Reduction in United States Army Reserve (USAR) Retention Based on Increased and Projected Personnel Tempo (PERSTEMPO) Under Operations Other Than War (MOOTW). ,2001 The purpose of this paper is to determine whether there is a long-term negative impact on unit readiness of USAR Troop Program Unit (TPU) soldiers continually called to active duty under Presidential Reserve Call-up (PRC). My intent is to analyze available information on retention trends to determine the long-term effects on USAR TPU readiness that are likely to occur because of continuous call to active duty. Could reduced retention rates break or significantly impact readiness? What policies are affected by reductions in retention? Are we retaining lesser-qualified soldiers to meet end strength objectives due to high Operational Tempo (OPTEMPO)? Can retention be effectively salvaged? Currently, Public Law permits the President to call reserve forces to active duty in support of MOOTW. Further, in order to meet end strength objectives, the make-up of the TPU is not professionally evolving and the leadership is placed in a position of not adhering to prescribed policies intended to maintain a highly developed and professional force. Is the current policy of calling USAR TPU soldiers to active duty in support of various MOOTW a viable use of reserve soldiers? Or, should these missions be modified to reduce the current level of mobilizations deployments of reserve soldiers. Thus, if the OPTEMPO and PERSTEMPO were reduced would that alone positively affect the overall war-fighting readiness of the USAR as the strategic reserve for our National Military Strategy?

Geo-Demographic Analysis in Support of the United States Army Reserve (USAR) Unit Positioning and Quality Assessment Model (UPQUAM)

Martin L. Fair,2004-06-01 Manning United States Army Reserve (USAR) units are fundamentally different from manning Regular Army (RA) units. A soldier assigned to a USAR unit must live within 75 miles or 90 minutes commute of his Reserve Center (RC). This makes reserve unit positioning a key factor in the ability to recruit to fill the unit. This thesis automates, documents, reconciles, and assembles data on over 30,000 ZIP Codes, over 800 RCs, and over 260 Military Occupational Specialties (MOSs), drawing on and integrating over a dozen disparate databases. This effort produces a single data file with demographic, vocational, and economic data on every ZIP Code in America, along with the six year results of its RA, USAR, sister service recruit production, and MOS suitability for each of the 264 MOSs. Preliminary model development accounts for about 70% recruit production variation by ZIP Code. This thesis also develops models for the top five MOSs to predict the maximum number of recruits obtained from a ZIP Code for that MOS. Examples illustrate that ZIP Codes vary in their ability to provide recruits with sufficient aptitude for technical fields. Two subsequent theses will use those results. One completes the MOS models. The second uses the models as constraints in an optimization model to position RCs. An initial version of the optimization model is developed in this thesis. Together, the three theses will provide a powerful tool for analysis of a strategic-based optimal reserve force stationing.

How Can USAR Recruiting Improve? You-Ying W. Whipple,2000 USAREC, which recruits for both the Regular Army and the Army Reserve, has missed the USAR recruiting objectives for the last five consecutive years (FY 1995-1999). Section 552 of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2000 directs the Secretary of the Army to conduct such a review, to include examining a possible course of corrective action, whether the responsibility for Army Reserve recruiting should be placed under the control of the Chief, Army Reserve (CAR). This Strategic Research Project reviewed the United States Army Reserve (USAR) recruiting performance by the United States Army Recruiting Command (USAREC) by analyzing the Reserve unit locations, recruiter surveys, and recruiter write-rates. Looking at the military eligible population of potential growth in this country, the author evaluates the locations of Army Reserve centers and Army National Guard armories. Using the Department of Defense recruiter surveys, the author ascertains recruiter performances and perspectives on issues related to recruiting. Finally, comparison of performances by Regular Army, Army Reserve, and Army National Guard recruiters are analyzed.
