Supercell's Supercell featuring Hatsune Miku Keisuke Yamada, 2017-08-10 The lead singer on Supercell's eponymous first album is Hatsune Miku—a Vocaloid character created by Crypton Future Media with voice synthesizers. A virtual superstar, over 100,000 songs, uploaded mostly by fans, are attributed to her. Supercell is a Japanese creator music group with the composer Ryo leading ten artists, who design album illustrations and make music videos. These videos are uploaded onto Niconico and other video-sharing sites. By the time Supercell was released in March 2009, the group's Vocaloid works were already well-known to Niconico users and fans. This book explores the Vocaloid and DTM (desktop music) phenomena through the lenses of media and fan studies, looking closely at online social media platforms, the new technology for composing, avid fans of the Vocaloid character, and these fans' performative practices. It provides a sense of how interactive new media and an empowered fan base combine to engage in the creation processes and enhance the circulation of DTM works. 33 1/3 Global, a series related to but independent from 33 1/3, takes the format of the original series of short, music-based books and brings the focus to music throughout the world. With initial volumes focusing on Japanese and Brazilian music, the series will also include volumes on the popular music of Australia/Oceania, Europe, Africa, the Middle East, and more.

The Race of Sound Nina Sun Eidsheim, 2018-12-06 In The Race of Sound Nina Sun Eidsheim traces the ways in which sonic attributes that might seem natural, such as the voice and its qualities, are socially produced. Eidsheim illustrates how listeners measure race through sound and locate racial subjectivities in vocal timbre—the color or tone of a voice. Eidsheim examines singers Marian Anderson, Billie Holiday, and Jimmy Scott as well as the vocal synthesis technology Vocaloid to show how listeners carry a series of assumptions about the nature of the voice and to whom it belongs. Outlining how the voice is linked to ideas of racial essentialism and authenticity, Eidsheim untangles the relationship between race, gender, vocal technique, and timbre while addressing an undertheorized space of racial and ethnic performance. In so doing, she advances our knowledge of the cultural-historical formation of the timbral politics of difference and the ways that comprehending voice remains central to understanding human experience, all the while advocating for a form of listening that would allow us to hear singers in a self-reflexive, denaturalized way.

Vocal Processing in Transnational Music Performances, from Phonograph to Vocaloid Gretchen Jude,2018 This dissertation investigates the phenomenon of voice as it occurs via audio technology, proposing a new term for this phenomenon—plasmatic voice. I argue that the incorporation of electronic mediation and processing practices to vocal sound fundamentally changes the nature of the human voice, in ways that have yet to be articulated. In addition to proposing plasmatic voice as an analytic tool for examining situations of electrovocality, this dissertation enlarges the scope of sound and voice studies by focusing on case studies that may be broadly construed as Japanese vocal performance. Commercial recordings (made between 1929 and 2009) of a song originally composed by anonymous geisha in the 19th century are examined alongside my own personal and somatic experiences learning the song, utilizing both ethnographic and performance methods. Next, close listening to and critical analysis of both live and recorded performances by contemporary Japanese experimental musicians living in Tokyo and Berlin provide the foundation for my description of plasmatic voice as assemblage; feminist elaborations of the Deleuzean term are juxtaposed with Massumian affect theory, to explore the implications of electronic vocal sound for human embodiment. In the final case study, I examine Yamaha Corporation’s Vocaloid singing synthesis software as exemplary of human-like voices that do not originate from human bodies. In such a case, voices exceed signification and identity, illustrating how vocal vibration transmits to a listener the lived sense of (another’s) body-in- motion. Through these three case studies, plasmatic voice as a concept addresses the question, what is a voice that vibrates through electronics? Further, I show that plasmatic voice as a phenomenon energizes vibrational practice, engaging analog and digital networks to engage in transformations at scales that elude human senses, in ways that require critical attention.
