Fumbling the Future Douglas K. Smith, 1999-06-01 Ask consumers and users what names they associate with the multibillion dollar personal computer market, and they will answer IBM, Apple, Tandy, or Lotus. The more knowledgeable of them will add the likes of Microsoft, Ashton-Tate, Compaq, and Borland. But no one will say Xerox. Fifteen years after it invented personal computing, Xerox still means copy. Fumbling the Future tells how one of America's leading corporations invented the technology for one of the fastest-growing products of recent times, then miscalculated and mishandled the opportunity to fully exploit it. It is a classic story of how innovation can fare within large corporate structures, the real-life odyssey of what can happen to an idea as it travels from inspiration to implementation. More than anything, Fumbling the Future is a tale of human beings whose talents, hopes, fears, habits, and prejudices determine the fate of our largest organizations and of our best ideas. In an era in which technological creativity and economic change are so critical to the competitiveness of the American economy, Fumbling the Future is a parable for our times.

Dealers of Lightning Michael A. Hiltzik, 2009-05-19 In the bestselling tradition of The Soul of a New Machine, Dealers of Lightning is a fascinating journey of intellectual creation. In the 1970s and '80s, Xerox Corporation brought together a brain-trust of engineering geniuses, a group of computer eccentrics dubbed PARC. This brilliant group created several monumental innovations that triggered a technological revolution, including the first personal computer, the laser printer, and the graphical interface (one of the main precursors of the Internet), only to see these breakthroughs rejected by the corporation. Yet, instead of giving up, these determined inventors turned their ideas into empires that radically altered contemporary life and changed the world. Based on extensive interviews with the scientists, engineers, administrators, and executives who lived the story, this riveting chronicle details PARC's humble beginnings through its triumph as a hothouse for ideas, and shows why Xerox was never able to grasp, and ultimately exploit, the cutting-edge innovations PARC delivered. Dealers of Lightning offers an unprecedented look at the ideas, the inventions, and the individuals that propelled Xerox PARC to the frontier of technohistory--and the corporate machinations that almost prevented it from achieving greatness.

Joe Wilson and the Creation of Xerox Charles D. Ellis, 2011-08-31 Charley Ellis has written a magnificent portrait, capturing the indomitable spirit of Joe Wilson and his instinctive understanding of the need for and commercial usefulness of a transforming imaging technology. Joe Wilson and his extraordinary team, which I had the good fortune to first meet in 1960, epitomized the wonderful observation of George Bernard Shaw who said, 'Some look at things that are, and ask why? I dream of things that never were and ask why not?' Xerox and xerography are not only a part of our vocabulary, but part of our everyday life. Charley Ellis gives the reader a poignant understanding of just how this happened through the life, adventures, critical business decisions, and dreams of Joseph Wilson and a cadre of remarkable individuals. This book will surely join the library of memorable biographies that capture the building of America into a risk-tolerant, technologically sophisticated, idea-oriented society that thrives by understanding what Charles Darwin really said: 'Survival will be neither to the strongest of the species, nor to the most intelligent, but to those most adaptable to change.' –Frederick Frank, Vice Chairman, Lehman Brothers Inc.

A World of Quality R.C (red.) Palersmo, Gregory H. Watson, 1996-03 This unique book gives a never-before-seen look at the internal workings of total quality management at Xerox Corporation. Xerox Corporation, the winner of 14 quality awards internationally, shares the accumulated knowledge gained from the organization's 15-year quality journey that enabled them to increase their profitability and reclaim market share in the face of fierce global competition. A World of Quality: The Timeless Passport was written by a team of quality professionals representing a broad cross section of Xerox. The book is co-edited by Richard C. Palermo, recently retired corporate vice president of quality and customer satisfaction, who played a significant role in implementing the quality process at Xerox, and Gregory H. Watson, vice president of product development at Xerox Quality Solutions. It highlights the successes of the Xerox quality process, as well as the pitfalls encountered while implementing quality initiatives throughout the corporation.

Copies in Seconds David Owen, 2008-06-30 The first plain-paper office copier -- which was introduced in 1960 and has been called the most successful product ever marketed in America -- is unusual among major high-technology inventions in that its central process was conceived by a single person. David Owen's fascinating narrative tells the story of the machine nobody thought we needed but now we can't live without. Chester Carlson grew up in unspeakable poverty, worked his way through junior college and the California Institute of Technology, and made his discovery in solitude in the depths of the Great Depression. He offered his big idea to two dozen major corporations -- among them IBM, RCA, and General Electric -- all of which turned him down. So persistent was this failure of capitalist vision that by the time the Xerox 914 was manufactured by an obscure photographic-supply company in Rochester, New York, Carlson's original patent had expired. Xerography was so unusual and nonintuitive that it conceivably could have been overlooked entirely. Scientists who visited the drafty warehouses where the first machines were built sometimes doubted that Carlson's invention was even theoretically feasible. Drawing on interviews, Xerox company archives, and the private papers of the Carlson family, David Owen has woven together a fascinating and instructive story about persistence, courage, and technological innovation -- a story that has never before been fully told.

Advanced secure printing from smartphones: how Xerox is leveraging the cloud to deliver a new generation of printing innovation. People occasionally need to print something from the phone: email attachments, presentations, brochures, or customized information sheets. Although Xerox could easily add Bluetooth or WiFi to its multifunction devices, new hardware isn't needed: most are already connected to the Internet, as are most smartphones. This leads to networked print services, sometimes called cloud printing.

Art and Innovation Craig Harris, 1999 The idea behind Xerox's interdisciplinary Palo Alto Research Center (PARC) is simple: If you put creative people in a hothouse setting, innovation will naturally emerge. PARC's Artist-in-Residence Program (PAIR) brings artists who use new media to PARC and pairs them with researchers who often use the same media, though in different contexts. The result is both interesting art and new scientific innovations. Art and Innovation explores the unique process that grew from this pairing of new media artists and scientists working at the frontier of developing technologies. In addition to discussing specific works created during several long-term residencies, the artists and researchers reveal the similarities and differences in their approaches and perspectives as they engage each other in a search for new methods of communication and creativity.

Seth Siegelaub Leontine Coelewij, Sara Martinetti, 2016 Surveys the life and work of the man widely known as 'the godfather of conceptual art.' Accompanying the eponymous exhibition at the Stedelijk Museum Amsterdam, it is the first comprehensive attempt to chart Siegelaub's activities as a curator, publisher, bibliographer, and collector across different realms, from conceptual art and mass media to politics and textiles--Back cover.

The Computers Nobody Wanted Paul A. Strassmann, 2008 The Computers Nobody Wanted is a history of an ill-conceived acquisition, in 1969, of Xerox's entry into the computer business to its subsequent abandonment. The text discusses attempts to convert a superior scientific computer to replace Xerox' own IBM computers that were processing business applications. The author was responsible for managing these conversions against technical obstacles that could not be overcome. After spending tens of millions for technology improvements, Xerox decided to exit from the computer business. The book also traces investments in a computer workstation - the STAR computer - from conception in 1973 to its dissolution in 1984. It describes the pioneering research at the Xerox PARC (Palo Alto Research Center) and how an inspired group produced superb innovations that were of no commercial value. During this epoch Strassmann was Vice-President of Strategic Planning for the Information Products Group that was responsible for transfer of PARC results to the marketplace.

Recording Conceptual Art Alexander Alberro, Patsy Norvell, 2001 Reading the interviews gathered by Patricia Norvell more than thirty years ago is like opening one of the time capsules Steven Kaltenbach made at around the same time and discusses here. It makes one feel nostalgic for these uncompromising times--so much has changed, so fast! One should be immensely grateful to Norvell for her undertaking and, paradoxically, for the long delay in the publication of these conversations: nothing could have better highlighted the candor and commitment of the artists who participated in this project than their willingness, long after the fact, to let their youthful voices be heard unedited. This is a precious document that casts a fresh light on the early history of Conceptual art, revealing all the doubts and uncertainties its practitioners had to overcome.--Yve-Alain Bois, Harvard University These interviews, full of the rich texture and confusion of an art movement at its inception, began as a process piece in mid-1969 when formalism still seemed worth defeating. The artists, tired of talking about turpentine, struggle to extend the rhetoric of form, and as they do so, reveal their roles as theorists and philosophers of a newly cerebral art, Conceptualism. Alberro's helpful introduction frames both Norvell's provocative questions and the surprising responses in a useful book that continues the process of historicizing 20th century art.--Caroline Jones, author of Machine in the Studio The contemporary interviews collected in this volume shift the ground on which conceptualism in the United States should be understood. The middle months of 1969 were a time of artistic and social unease when artists were anxious to test-and occasionally to declaim, as the interviews demonstrate-ideas in conversation with a sympathetic interlocutor. Patricia Norvell proves to have been an ideal listener. She knew conceptualism well enough to keep the conversations honest, but not so well as to make the artists defensive and wary. The artists had things to say, and were not afraid to put themselves out on a limb.--John O'Brian, Professor of Art History, University of British Columbia A key document of the late 1960s avant-garde.--James Meyer, Emory University [This book is] a reminder that the project of Conceptual art and its artists' reasons for refusing the object of art were far from monolithic. The differences that emerge in the interviews are spoken in voices that are still fresh and particular, but each voice and position is tied to the moment of the late 1960s, from stoned mysticism to philosophical idealism, from political optimism to materialist critique.--Howard Singerman, author of Art Subjects

My Years with Xerox John H. Dessauer, 1971

Dealers of Lightning Michael Hiltzik, 1999-04-01 The story of the legendary Xerox PARC -- where eccentric young inventors were brought together by Xerox Corp. at a facility in Palo Alto, CA, during the 70s and 80s. This extraordinary group brought about a technological revolution that would change the world. Takes the reader on a journey from PARC's beginnings at the edge of Stanford Univ. to its triumph as a hothouse of ideas that spawned not only the first personal computer, but the windows-style graphical user interface, the laser printer, the indispensable technology of the Internet, and more. Details the frustration of the original PARC scientists, many of whom would go on to build their fortunes upon the very ideas Xerox discarded.

SUMMARY - Fumbling The Future: How Xerox Invented, Then Ignored, The First Personal Computer By Robert C. Alexander And Douglas K. Smith Shortcut Edition, 2021-06-17 * Our summary is short, simple and pragmatic. It allows you to have the essential ideas of a big book in less than 30 minutes. As you read this summary, you will discover how Xerox, the photocopier company, invented the microcomputer, but did not commercially exploit this discovery. You will also discover : that this first microcomputer dates back to 1973; that IBM's first PC was released in 1981, almost ten years later; that Xerox could have become the market leader if its leaders had come to an agreement; that Apple's first computer, the Apple I, didn't even have a screen. How could Xerox, after inventing the first personal computer, the Alto, leave such a discovery lying fallow? After several years of research on the question, Douglas K. Smith and Robert C. Alexander dismantled the internal mechanisms that led to the abandonment of one of the most revolutionary products ever conceived. Believe it or not, few police investigations are as exciting! After reading this summary, will you see your computer in the same light? *Buy now the summary of this book for the modest price of a cup of coffee!

Recovering the Fumbles and Organizing for the Future Wayne G. Walker, Rand Corporation, 1993 This case study of Xerox provides an analogy of the problems facing the military acquisition system and what must be done to repair it. Many of Xerox's competitive problems originated with the phased program planning and reviews Xerox introduced when it hired executives from Ford to cope with its nova-like growth during the 1960s. Similar controls were imposed on the military acquisition system (by executives from the same source, Ford) leading to comparable inefficiencies. The study explores how Xerox fumbled the computer innovations developed at its PARC research center and the subsequent bold organizational steps Xerox has taken to integrate its research and development into its overall corporate effort, in effect, to recover the fumble. The failures and organizational changes at Xerox are examined in the context of four organizational learning frameworks: (1) learning in practice versus the culture of acquisition, (2) three models of innovation--linear, cyclical, and network, (3) the Chris Argyris Model I and Model II patterns of organizational behavior, and (4) resonant organizational learning determinants and conditions. Finally, the case study draws lessons from the Xerox experience for the military acquisition system. These include eliminating the linear model of R&D and the phased program milestone process and establishing an integrated acquisition process. In addition, military suppliers should also be encouraged to adopt the learning paradigm.

As recognized, adventure as without difficulty as experience just about lesson, amusement, as well as harmony can be gotten by just checking out a book Xerox as well as it is not directly done, you could bow to even more almost this life, with reference to the world.
