Tonight, Somewhere in New York

Perseus, 2005-08-04 Cornell Woolrich reinvented suspense fiction for the twentieth century. His unnerving tales of the psychological terrors lurking on the underside of the commonplace earned Woolrich epithets like our poet of the shadows, the twentieth century's Edgar Allen Poe, and the father of noir. The twilight years of Woolrich's career did not soften his vision; they darkened it, as the selections in Tonight, Somewhere in New York, rivetingly show. In addition to nine masterly stories from the late 1950s and 1960s, some of them never before collected, this Woolrich anthology offers two evocative episodes from the autobiographical manuscript on which he worked during his latter years as well as five chapters of the novel he left unfinished at the time of his death in 1968. Page after suspenseful page, this collection amply demonstrates the power of his vision. Again and again, ordinary individuals get caught up in everyday circumstances that spin perversely, murderously, out of control. Unexpected perils lie in wait everywhere?in a hotel corridor, in the insistent ring of a telephone, on a street one day in Rome, or inside a black sedan that without wheels would look like a coffin.

Rear Window Cornell Woolrich, 2001 The title story of this collection of chilling, suspense stories sees Hal Jeffries, who is trapped in his apartment because of a broken leg, watching his neighbours through his rear window, convinced that one of them is a murderer.

The Good Die Young Cornell Woolrich, 2008-08-01 The Lost Stories of Cornell Woolrich This collection of 35 stories and essays spans the years 1926 through 1939, and includes all but two of Cornell Woolrich's 'romance' works of less than novel length. This is truly the 'lost' Woolrich canon; only one of these stories has ever been reprinted, and that just a year after its initial publication. Woolrich began his writing career as an admirer and imitator of the 'Jazz Age' tales of F. Scott Fitzgerald. Some of his earliest short-form efforts in this vein are paper-thin, but from the very beginning the poetry of his prose and his ability to turn a memorable phrase are apparent, and there are occasional sparks throughout that demonstrate the talent, style and motifs that would eventually make him the master of suspense.

The Black Curtain Cornell Woolrich, 2016-05-03 Cornell Woolrich, along with Raymond Chandler and James M. Cain, was one of the creators of the noir genre.

Cornell Woolrich--first You Dream, Then You Die Francis M. Nevins, 1988 Traces the life and career of the American mystery writer, discusses his novels and major short stories, and describes his influence on the film noir genre

Darkness at Dawn Cornell Woolrich, 1985 From 1934 until his death in 1968, Cornell Woolrich wrote dozens of tales of love and despair that chill the heart and display his mastery of the genre he all but created. In a title for a story he never wrote, he captured the essence of his tortured world: First you dream, then you die. Introducing these 13 tales, Nevins describes the dark world Woolrich so vividly creates. The dominant reality in his world is the Depression, and Woolrich has no peers when it comes to describing a frightened little guy in a tiny apartment with no money, no job, a hungry wife and children, and anxiety eating him like a cancer. If a Woolrich protagonist is in love, the beloved is likely to vanish in such a way that he not only can't find her but can't convince anyone she ever existed.

The Black Path of Fear Cornell Woolrich, 2016-05-03
